USU students work up plans for Union Station, west Ogden

Pictured is a scale model of the design and conceptual drawings done by LAEP Students.

Senior projects for landscape architecture and environmental planning students is an opportunity for students to work in teams and apply their skills to a real-world experience. This year, one group of students focused on improving the Union Station rail yard and neighboring community in Ogden. The LAEP students presented their project to Ogden city officials who will be reviewing the plans over the next year.

View the full story:
USU students work up plans for Union Station - Standard Examiner